Member's Book Review

The Blue Hour* by Paula Hawkins

The powerful new thriller from the global No.1 bestselling author, Paula Hawkins

'Vivid, extremely tense, unnervingly unputdownable. This is a superb, powerful read.'

'Undoubtedly Hawkins' best novel yet'

For twelve hours each day, the Scottish island of Eris is cut off from the mainland. No way in. No way out.

The island's only house was once home to Vanessa, whose notoriously unfaithful husband disappeared twenty years ago. Now this remote and beautiful place is home to Grace . . . a solitary creature of the tides, guarding the island's past.

But far away in London, a stranger has just made a startling discovery - a human bone where no human bone should be. And in that moment Grace's precious isolation is threatened.

How will she respond? Can she be trusted? Or is it Grace who should be afraid?

Suddenly this is a very dangerous time to be alone . . .

'A darkly atmospheric, engaging mystery - her best book since The Girl On The Train.' Good Housekeeping (Book of the Year)

Candace Robb

A past master at the historical mystery niche, Candace Robb is an American woman of letters. Robb, who has also published under the name Emma Campion, was born in 1950, in Blue Ridge Mountains upon North Carolina, in the US. Robb, who is a quinquagenarian, spent her formative years in Cincinnati upon Ohio. During her childhood, she often frequented libraries after which she forced her childhood friends to act the storyline. Robb often travels to the United Kingdom, especially Scotland and York, in her quest for materials for her literary work. However, she is presently domiciled in Washington.

Candace Robb attended the University of Cincinnati wherein she studied Anglo-Saxon studies and medieval literature; she has a PhD to show for it. She has served as an editor in science-oriented publications. Incidentally, Robb uses the name Candace Robb when penning crime fiction while the name Emma Campion is used for historical books.
